Pharvaris

Positive ph3 data, in-line with injectable efficacy

Pharmaceuticals and Biotechnology | The Netherlands

Pharvaris reported an 83% attack reduction rate vs. placebo in its pivotal HAE prophylaxis study. Focusing on patients with HAE types 1 and 2, the attack-rate reduction reached 87%, which is in line with the injectable standard of care Takhzyro. Safety-wise the therapy showed a well-tolerated profile. With these results we believe that deucrictibant is clearly differentiated from Orladeyo on efficacy, which will enable the product to become the 1L treatment for new HAE patients. We expect a positive share price reaction today. We raise our PoS for deucrictibant in prophylactic HAE to 90%, which brings our TP to $ 49, and we reiterate our Buy rating.

News: Pharvaris announces positive topline data from CHAPTER-3 pivotal study of Deucrictibant XR for prophylaxis of HAE attacks. The company held a conference call at 8:00 a.m. EDT.

- Efficacy: Primary endpoint met: 83% attack rate reduction versus placebo ($p<0.0001$) in the first and only prophylaxis Phase 3 study in all three types of HAE. 87% attack rate reduction versus placebo observed in people with HAE Type 1 or Type 2. All secondary efficacy endpoints met with statistical significance. Early-onset protection was achieved within one week and sustained for the full treatment period (more data, see below).
- Safety: Well-tolerated safety profile of deucrictibant XR demonstrated with most common AE: upper respiratory tract infections, nasopharyngitis and headache. There were two people with level 2 liver enzyme elevation, of which one discontinued the study, while the other one continued the study to completion (both patients had confounding factors like fatty liver disease). In the placebo arm one patient discontinued due to urticaria.
- Design: The study randomized 85 participants from 21 countries in a 2:1 ratio to deucrictibant XR (N=55) or placebo (N=30) for 24 weeks of treatment.
- Outlook: Data from the CHAPTER-3 study will serve as the basis for marketing authorization applications, which are planned to be submitted starting in 1H27. Topline data from Part 1 of CREAATE (NCT07266805), a global, pivotal Phase 3 study evaluating orally-administered deucrictibant XR for the prevention of AAE-C1INH attacks, are anticipated in 1Q27.

Our view: Pharvaris reported an 83% attack-rate reduction versus placebo in CHAPTER-3. Focusing on the 80 patients with HAE types 1 and 2, efficacy improved further to an 87% attack-rate reduction, broadly in line with the current injectable standard of care, Takhzyro (see table below). Ahead of the readout, our base case assumed an 80-85% reduction, and the reported data came in comfortably within that range. We believe these results clearly differentiate deucrictibant from Orladeyo on efficacy and support its potential to become the preferred first-line prophylactic treatment for newly diagnosed HAE patients. We expect a positive share price reaction today. Consequently, we raise our probability of success for deucrictibant in prophylactic HAE to 90%, increase our target price to $ 49, and reiterate our Buy rating.

The price target for Pharvaris is based on the following parameters:
Pharvaris is a Dutch biotech developing deucrictibant for HAE, a rare genetic disease with a $3b market, in both the on-demand and prophylactic settings. We see Pharvaris as an attractive investment case underpinned by deucrictibant's de-risked B2R target, competitive phase 2 results setting it up to be the only high efficacy oral option, in addition to a validated commercial opportunity for more convenient orals as evidenced by competitor Orladeyos's successful launch despite sub-par efficacy. We are confident in the upcoming phase 3 readouts in HAE on-demand (1Q26) and prophylaxis (2H26).

The risks which may impede the achievement of our price target for Pharvaris are:
