On To The Next CHAPTER-3; Raising Target To $50

The Wedbush View

The Wedbush View: Remain Outperform rated on PHVS, new $50 target. The CHAPTER-3 readout landed in-line with our expectations as deucrictibant XR demonstrated an 83% reduction in monthly attack rates versus placebo. On secondary endpoints like attack-free interval, deucrictibant XR looks similar vs. Takhzyro with 45.5% of patients attack free from weeks 1-24 vs. 44% for Takhzyro. Overall safety appears uneventful and while there were two cases of liver enzyme elevations, we spoke to PHVS who indicated one of these subjects had concomitant fatty liver disease. Bottom line, we see the data appearing robust overall for PHVS and we are increasing our deucrictibant XR gross pricing assumption to $45k/month. Staying consistent with our valuation methodology, our PHVS target increases to $50 (prior $42). We also see read through to Outperform-rated BCRX and with our base case already assuming deucrictibant XR reaches the market, we anticipate patients already controlled on Orladeyo will be less likely to switch. No change to our Outperform rating on BCRX and PHVS.

- Much anticipated CHAPTER-3 data arrives, in-line vs. expectations. PHVS reported deucrictibant XR yielded an 83% attack rate reduction vs. placebo (95% CI: 72-90%, p<0.0001). The results are in-line with our expectations and appear comparable to Takhzyro. Also notable, PHVS reported ~46% attack-free rates over the 24-week treatment period which is also comparable to data previously reported for Takhzyro. Bottom line, the data appears positive and supportive in our view.
- Overall safety data also appears supportive. Management reported no treatment-related serious adverse events in the study. We checked in with PHVS who noted that the subject with the Grade 4 event (laryngeal dyskinesia) has ~19 laryngeal attacks prior to the treatment period and achieved a 90% attack rate reduction. Given the background, this one appears more complicated, and we see little read through. Two cases of transaminase elevations with one discontinuation occurred in a patient with concomitant fatty liver disease. Bottom line, the safety appears comparable to other agents in our view.
- Model updates -- increasing deucrictibant XR pricing assumptions. Following the update, we are raising our pricing assumptions to $45k/month and this translates to a net annual cost ~$418k per patient. Although management offered no commentary on the call, we see this as more in-line versus recent HAE prophy drug launches.
- Raising PHVS target to $50. The deucrictibant XR pricing update shifts our PHVS target to $50 (prior $42). Dr. Marc Riedl (UCSD) estimated ~20% of his HAE patients are on an oral regimen today and while there may be some pockets that switch, he also anticipated deucrictibant XR switches could come from Takhzyro patients as they seek an alternative regimen. This is consistent with our prior survey work. For Outperform BCRX, no change to our outlook as the PHVS data appears as anticipated and we continue to anticipate Phase 3 navenibart data in 3Q27.

Key Takeaways – CHAPTER-3 Highlights

PHVS reported top-line results from the CHAPTER-3 study of deucrictibant XR. Most important, the primary endpoint was met with deucrictibant XR lowering monthly attack rates by 83% vs. placebo (see figure below).

*Additional analysis of HAE Type 1/2, not adjusted for multiplicity. Notes: HAE Attacks / Month = time-normalized (per 4 weeks) number of investigator-confirmed HAE attacks during the 24-week treatment period. Results based on a Poisson regression model adjusted for treatment group, baseline attack rate, and age group. Abbreviations: CI: confidence interval. HAE: hereditary angioedema. N, n: number of participants. XR: extended-release.

Additionally, PHVS disclosed a rapid onset of action with deucrictibant XR. The figure shown below illustrates the change in attack rates over time (through week 24) with deucrictibant XR and placebo.

Also notable, PHVS reported 45.5% of subjects were attack free during the 24 weeks of the study. This compared to 3% for placebo-treated subjects. Relative to Takhzyro, we note this is comparable.

Notes: Attack rate = time-normalized (per 4 weeks) number of investigator-confirmed HAE attacks during the 24-week Treatment Period. Abbreviations: XR: extended-release.

While the overall rates of treatment-emergent adverse events were relatively uneventful, PHVS reported three Grade 3 events. Of these, there were two incidents of transaminase elevations. We spoke with PHVS who indicated one subject had fatty liver disease and discontinued treatment. We note that other HAE prophylactic treatments have had liver enzyme elevations. We will continue to monitor for potential impacts in the open-label extension setting.

Model Updates – Increasing Deucrictibant XR Pricing Assumptions

Following the CHAPTER-3 update, we are increasing our pricing assumption for deucrictibant XR. Recently priced prophy drugs have been >$50k/month and with deucrictibant XR demonstrating Takhzyro-like efficacy, we are increasing our estimate to $45k/month on a gross basis. The figure shown below illustrates our revised pricing and we estimate net annual pricing of ~$418k for deucrictibant XR.

After lapse of a partial discounting period, our PHVS target increases to $50 (prior $42). Remain Outperform rated on PHVS. What about the potential impact to Outperform-rated BCRX? Our base case already assumed a successful CHAPTER-3 readout and eventual deucrictibant commercial launch. With the data now in hand, nothing changes in our assumptions for BCRX. Dr. Marc Reidl estimated about 20% of his current HAE patients are on an oral regimen today but also indicated that there would likely be some patients on Takhyzro that may be interested in switching. This is consistent with our prior physician survey work. Bottom line, with Phase 3 navenibart data arriving in 3Q27, BCRX holds a second asset that can help prolong its HAE presence.

Valuation

Our PHVS target derives from a sum-of-parts DCF analysis which examines potential PHVS416 and PHVS719 cash flows, discounted back by 15% per year.

Company Description

Pharvaris N.V. (PHVS) is headquartered in Switzerland, with additional presence in the Netherlands and Boston. Deucrictibant represents the most advanced asset and is being developed for the treatment of hereditary angioedema attacks.

Risks to the Attainment of Our Price Target and Rating:

- Clinical. Data emerging from clinical studies can significantly impact shares in either a positive or negative direction.
- Regulatory. PHVS may employ accelerated strategies to gain approval. Regulators may require additional data or could alter their requirements for approval, necessitating additional or longer studies. Failure to gain product labels that lack certain features could limit PHVS' ability to gain traction in the market.
- Commercial. Failure to execute commercially or inability to meet/exceed expectations can impact shares.
- Competitive. Updates from competitors may positively or negatively impact shares.
- Financial. PHVS will need to access the capital markets to complete development and commercialization of their assets. If they are unable to raise adequate funds, this could impact their ability to continue advancing their pipeline.
